Too Conscientious to Fight

The British authorities are very properly overruling the "conscientious objections" of those fellow citizens who do not want to go to war, who have scruples against killing or being killed. Such objectors are now being sentenced to long terms at hard labor and are being kept where the enemies of Great Britain cannot get at them to do them bodily harm. At first the government was inclined to be easy with them; it was going to form them into "non-combatant corps." They were to be set at all sorts of manual labor which, otherwise, fighting men would have to perform, such as road making, timber cutting, preparing camps, loading and unloading ships, etc. But they were not to be set at building wire entanglements under the fire of enemy guns, nor were they otherwise to be exposed to the dangers of battle. The very care which it was proposed to take of these "conscientious objectors" probably suggested that they had conscientious objections only to being killed or hurt and most of us entertain some kind of objection to such casualties. It does not seem right to any of us.

A man's conscience is something he cannot do with as he pleases, regardless of the effect of his action or non-action on his neighbors. In this country there is an understanding that the constitution guarantees to us the right to "worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience." That is true within certain limitations. The constitution does not permit us to carry our worship to the extent of annoying or damaging our neighbors or to infringing upon public policy or to the doing or the neglecting to do anything which the law requires to be done or which the law forbids doing. Various religious sects at one time or another have run against these limitations of the constitutional guaranty.

Of course, conscience is a great thing, so long as it is conscience and not some sort of self-interest masquerading under that guise. And it is equally true that nobody can tell what conscience is about except the man who owns it. Its work is as secret and individual as a headache or a pain in the stomach. The secrecy of this inner monitor, guide or friend makes it difficult for the government to deal with it when it interposes itself, really or apparently, between the government and certain things which the government thinks it is "highly necessary to do." It is impossible for a government to know whether it is confronted by a real conscience or a simulated conscience, unless it puts the matter to a severer test than is quite workable or possible in every-day proceedings.

Even though there may be no doubt that the conscience is all wool and a yard wide, the government cannot permit the owner of it to evade an obligation which necessity or the law imposes upon all citizens, and there can be no direr necessity than that which war brings. If one may be saved by his conscience from participation in war every shirker may be so saved. And if one's conscience may exempt him from his duties as a soldier, it may be made to exempt him from his duties and responsibilities as a private citizen. Thus we are brought in sight of a state of anarchy produced by conscience allowed to run riot.

Something That Needs Attention

Those who have business on the streets of Phoenix at unusual hours of night are amazed at the number of young girls who are abroad and unattended or worse than unattended, accompanied by young or middle-aged men of evil reputation and design. Some of these girls are said to be the daughters of respectable parents, while others probably belong to a sub-stratum of society with no one in particular to look after their movements.

There is a sorry laxity that permits this sort of thing. If parents cannot control the coming and going of their young and irresponsible daughters, the authorities should feel called upon to act. Now and then there is some particularly outbursting case which brings the parties into the juvenile or the criminal court, and then we are shocked and pained by the disclosure. But our unhappy frame of mind comes too late to do the young girls any good or to save the young men from the penitentiary. The life of the girl is ruined.

We do not know that Phoenix is worse in this respect than other towns of the same size, but we are informed that the situation here is shocking and rotten. In some manner whiskey is freely procured, so that it is said that probably more of it is drunk by minors, girls as well as boys, than before an attempt was made to prohibit the use of it. The very act of circumventing the law adds some zest to dissipation.

We think it would be well for officers to keep a close watch on the situation and they should also investigate the character of certain houses in different parts of town that are not quite above suspicion.

Ideal Husbands

A canvas made among the co-eds of the University of Minnesota shows why there are so many divorce suits, or maybe only explains why there are likely to be several, when those girls are married. The young ladies were interviewed as to the qualifications they would require of husbands. Naturally, the matter of income was foremost and on this point there was a wide range of opinion, extending from $300 a year to $10,000. The average was $1600. We imagine that the girls who demanded $10,000 would be likely to be involved in unhappy marriages. A girl who would require that income would marry chiefly for money, and such marriages are not usually happy. A girl who thinks that a family could get along on $300 a year would be subject to disillusionment and would not survive the disappointment.

The peculiar thing about the answers was that a majority of them demanded that the prospective husbands should be good dancers, that they should know all the latest steps. One girl said that the chief desire of her heart was a "dreamy dancer." But a time comes in the life of every woman when she does not care for dancing, and if her husband should continue that form of indoor sport he would find that he had danced into the divorce court.

Most of the answers offered no objection to smoking husbands, though the line was generally drawn at drinking. Card playing was reduced to whist, though one young woman would allow her husband one night a week with the boys at poker, probably for the purpose of supplementing the family income.

The president's "frank and intimate review" of his three years in the presidency, before the National Press Club on Tuesday night, was a felicitous, half humorous and witty description of his own feelings toward that office, and not really, or at all, a recital of his own accomplishments. It conveyed also the impression that the president earns all he gets for his worries and loss of sleep. What the president told the newspaper boys will tend to make the office unpopular.

Notwithstanding the demand of the New York World that the republican party nominate Mr. Wilson, on the theory that it is bad business to swap horses while crossing a stream, various states are going ahead instructing republican delegates to vote for Hughes, Roosevelt and other candidates than Mr. Wilson. The rejoinder has been made to the World's proposition that the president has not been carrying the country across a stream anyhow. He has been only sitting on a fence watchfully waiting. One man can perform that kind of a task about as well as another.

It is said to have been discovered that print paper can be made of hops, and this will be a relief to a situation that is causing a great deal of trouble in newspaper offices, whose contracts with the paper mills are about to expire. In other quarters it is probably being asked whether there cannot be a reciprocal arrangement by which newspapers may be liquefied and converted into beer or ale.

THE CASTLE BY THE SEA

Saw'st thou a castle fair?
Yon castle by the sea;
Golden and rosy there,
The clouds float gorgeously.
And faint it would descend
Into the wave below,
And faint it would soar and blend
With the evening's crimson glow.

Yon castle have I viewed,
Yon castle by the sea;
The moon above it stood
And the mists hung heavily.

The wind and the heaving sea,
Sounded they fresh and strong;
From the hall came notes of glee,
Harping and festive song.

—Johann Ludwig Childan

"Why, Lillian," said her mother, "why are you pounding your dollie with my slipper?"
"Because she refused to obey me, mama," answered the little miss, "and I'm not going to have the neighbors saying that I 'spared the slipper and spoiled the child.'"

They'll Remember This Sale
40 Years From Today!

Perhaps you will be one of the numerous housewives to look affectionately at your Hoosier Kitchen Cabinet forty years hence, thinking how many, many hours of toil it saved you during all those years. Perhaps you too will say like so many women who already own the Hoosier: "If it had cost me double the price, it is worth it."

But Hoosier prices are exceedingly low because each year the great Hoosier factory is building these cabinets for the thousands and thousands of women. That cuts the cost per cabinet away down.

Why waste money on some flimsy, poorly planned cabinet that means at the best only more shelf-room? The Hoosier brings you 40 inventions that actually save you time and labor and miles of steps. Remember we are demonstrating all these things at this sale.

Remember there are Hoosiers for farms, camps, apartments, big and little kitchens, for window spaces and the center of big kitchens. No further need for old-fashioned, built-in, uncleanable cupboards.
